II. The Historical Setting

A. Jeremiah was written after 300 Years of National Decline

1. When Tiglath-pileser (745 – 727 BC) began to conquer the smaller nations of the West (i.e. Syria, Israel), the various nations formed coalitions. Rezin (Damascus) and Pekah (Samaria) sought to draw Ahaz (king of Judah, 731 – 715 BC) into the coalition. Ahaz refused and the land was invaded (Isaiah 7:1- 8:18). Ahaz appealed to Tiglath-pileser for protection (2 Kings 16:7-8). Tiglath-pileser responded promptly eventually crushing Damascus in 732 BC and turning Judah into a vassal of Assyria.

2. As a vassal Judah paid homage to the gods of Assyria. This compromise spared Judah military invasion, however, when Hezekiah assumed the throne Sennacherib (705 – 681) invaded Judah. Though repelled at Jerusalem, by divine intervention, Isaiah 36-38, Judah and its coalitions were devastated both militarily and financially, cp. 2 Kings 18:9 – 19:37.

3. With the weakened condition of Judah and the passing of Hezekiah, Mannasseh (687 – 642) ascended the throne returning Judah to the pro-Assyrian policies of Ahaz. Canceling all the reforms of Hezekiah, Mannasseh gave full reign to pagan practices, tolerating the fertility cults, temple prostitution within the Temple precincts, and the worship of Molech with its human sacrifices, 2 Kings 21:1-18.

4. As Josiah (641 – 609 BC ) ascends the throne what remains of Judah is steeped in paganism of every sort. Josiah’s godly character and reforms stave off the destruction of Jerusalem for another generation. Consider 2 Kings 22:14-20. It is in this spiritual and political context Jeremiah begins his ministry.

Approaches to the prophetic/ apocalyptic portions of Ezekiel.

Definition of apocalyptic literature: a type of prophetic literature in which God reveals His future plans through dreams, visions, symbols, and various images. E.g. Daniel 7-8; Zechariah 1—5; 9—14; Isaiah 24—27; Ezekiel 38—39. God is seen outside of history intervening into a hopeless situation so radically as to usher in a totally new era (Introduction to Biblical Interpretation, Klein, Blomberg, Hubbard, p311).

Approaches to Ezekiel 34—48

1. Literalistic approach: every figure of speech, every nuance is to be taken literally.

2. Symbolic approach: because the NT writers understood much of the OT prophetic message to have some resemblance to ministry of Christ and the description of the Church (e.g. priests, Temple, sacrifices) many interpreters believe that the OT prophecies were symbolically fulfilled in the Church and ministry of Christ through the Church. Thus, the restoration described in 34, 36—37 refers to Israel’s return from Babylon and the reappointment of a Davidic leader over Israel. The messianic age is Jesus ruling over God’s people, the Church, today. The perfection of this rule awaits the new earth. The Kingdom of God has been inaugurated and is viewed as already here not yet perfected. The Temple chapters generically describe the glorious future of God’s people in details that would have encouraged the Jewish exiles, since their literal Temple had just been destroyed.

3. Normal approach: Allowing the context and the text of Ezekiel to determine meaning, this approach neither takes figures and analogies literally, nor does specific Jewish information (Temple, house of David, land, regeneration) finds its ultimate fulfillment in the Church. The text interprets the text.

Hints for interpreting apocalyptic prophecy: 1. set a modest goal; 2. Take the symbolism and numbers seriously, but not literally; 3. Read OT apocalyptic literature along with NT Matthew 24 and Revelation; 4. Observe the pastoral concerns for the original readers; 5. Move beyond the details and determine the main points; 6. Application should derive from the main points.
